Autumn 2010

DOWN AND DIRTY

New school year means new projects. We really dove into sculpting. Our sculpting has consisted of malleable tin, papier mâché, matboard and hot-glue guns, clay, etc. The creations have been big, bold, beautiful, and unquestionably messy! It seems society teaches our kids to be very neat and stay within the lines. Here at Studio e the students learn my motto of "Always Color Outside the Lines". That goes for being messy. If messy leads to a creation that could not be accomplished in any other way, then that works for me. Of course, wild, unproductive messiness isn't condoned and these kids are definitely learning the difference!

Natalie and her leggy hen.

Tommy and his sleek, black jet.

Annie with her multicolored baby ostrich.

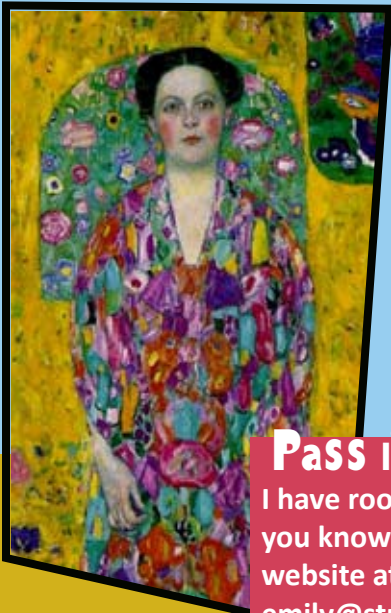

Thank you... for being such good parents/guardians!! I really appreciate how you have been dropping off and picking up your students in such a timely manner.

PROJECTS...

Austrian born Gustav Klimt is the master artist we will be focusing on for the next couple of weeks. His life spanned 1862-1918. He is known as a "symbolist painter". When the kids bring their paintings home, you'll know exactly why he is known by that title.

Pass it on!!

I have room for more students. Send anyone you know who is interested in art classes to my website at www.studioefargo.com or to emily@studioefargo.com.

Children work at their own pace on each project. Julia is using her free time to fill the pages of her sketchbook. Please check with your child to see if they need a new sketchbook. They use them almost every class!
